The number of people with dementia will increase by 60 percent in the United States and 70 percent in the United Kingdom by 2040, according to new projections from the World Health Organization. Data from the 2015 Global Burden of Disease Study confirms that dementia prevalence will rise faster than any other neurological condition. The projections are based on data from more than 200 countries and territories, including the United States, Canada and Australia, and are the first of their kind. "The projected high rates of dementia prevalence reflect the fact that millions of people in high- and middle-income countries are already at risk of dementia, and those numbers are expected to rise as a result of population ageing,” said Dr. Tim Dietrich, lead author of a WHO report on the projections. “This is the first of its kind, showing the level of attention the topic has gained in recent years.”
